

The Certificate in Writing is a 30-credit-hour program that consists of current course offerings in the Department of Rhetoric, Writing, and Communications (RHET), and allows students the flexibility to create a program of study that focuses on elements of written communication.

Graduates of the certificate program gain an understanding of audience, genre, and textual processes; as well as an increased confidence in writing knowledge, revision practices, written conventions, editing, and attention to style. These advanced skills in writing are valuable for communication in any professional or academic field.
